10:05	Panel Discussion AI on the Battlefield: Who Wins – Attackers or Defenders? AI is no longer just a tool for innovation: it's a double-edged sword in cybersecurity. While defenders leverage AI to detect threats faster, automate responses, and predict attacks, adversaries are equally harnessing AI for sophisticated phishing, evasion, and autonomous attacks. This panel dives into the dual-use nature of AI in cybersecurity, exploring whether the advantage lies with attackers, defenders, or if the outcome depends on strategy, governance, and ethical use. • How is AI changing the cybersecurity landscape for both defenders and attackers? • What types of AI-powered tools are organisations using today to strengthen security, and what challenges are you seeing in their deployment? • With attackers potentially using AI as well, how can organisations maintain a strategic advantage? • How do internal policies, ethical frameworks, and regulatory requirements influence AI adoption in cybersecurity?

15:30	Fireside Chat Keeping Humans in the Loop in the Age of AI The security industry is betting heavily on autonomy: systems that patch themselves, agents that act without asking permission. Almost no one is asking which decisions should never be delegated. Some security decisions deserve friction. They are better made by a human who holds context no agent can infer, and the CISO's job is now to work out which they are. This session looks at how to split decisions between people and agents, and where organisations might be drawing that line in the wrong place. Speakers: Ang Leong Boon Senior Head (Cybersecurity & GRC) NUS Information Technology Fenil Pathak Vice President, Regional Cyber Risk and Controls Manager State Street
